Directors' Notes . . .

THE DRUNKARD is an original American Melodrama first produced for the stage in 1844 at the Boston Museum in Boston, Mass. As a form of the drama, it was popular in the 18th and Early Nineteenth Centuries. Melodrama is a combination of music and drama and throughout the Nineteenth Century this type of play was accompanied by a musical score just as a movie is today. Underlining the emotional qualities of scenes, music helped to achieve the desired response from the audience. Perhaps the most important feature of melodrama is its observance of strict moral justice. No matter how horrible the trials of virtuous characters or how powerful the villainous, the good are rewarded and the evil are punished. Tonights' production has these elements and a few of our own. The style of acting is exaggerated and overdrawn. The audience is drawn into the action by both word and music. We invite you to join us in a frolicsome night of nostalgic fervor, heroic bravado, masterful cunning and the triumph of virtue.
